Agility Integration Deploys Mobile Wireless Network on School Buses

September 28, 2015 - Coachella, California: The Coachella Valley Unified School District administers one of the largest school districts in the country, covering more than 1200 square miles. Because of this large area, many students must endure a long bus ride in excess of 60 minutes each way. Some of the communities in this region have limited access to the internet, which creates a substantial disadvantage for the students preparing to join a technologic workforce.

As a pilot program, in December of 2014, Agility Integration installed mobile wireless access in three buses that travelled the longest routes in the district. Thanks to the efforts of Coachella Valley Unified School District Superintendent Dr. Darryl Adams to implement this solution, the program has received praise from President Obama in a recent press conference. CVUSD was the first district in the United States to provide Ipad's for all students, Kindergarten through 12th grade. Deploying a fleet of mobile wireless hot spots furthers the efforts to extend student internet access throughout this community.

In September of 2015, Agility Integration installed wireless hotspots in the entire fleet of 100 CVUSD school buses. This installation is multifaceted and included physical installation, cloud based management and solar capabilities. Our solution has received rave reviews by the students, bus drivers, administrators and IT staff. In addition, several buses are being retrofitted with solar panels and will be parked in designated areas overnight to enable students and community residents to have internet access that is currently not available.
